Le Boudoir

Marie Antoinette is a popular figure in cocktail culture—legend has it that the coupe glass was modeled after her left breast, and NYC bars from the Bourgeois Pig to Dear Irving have taken influence from her opulent ways. Now, the French queen is getting another boozy homage, courtesy this Brooklyn Heights hideaway, inspired by her private chambers at the Château de Versailles. From the team behind French bistro Chez Moi, the 55-seat bar is accessed through a staircase tucked behind a secret bookshelf inside the bistro and is outfitted with red-velvet banquettes, silver-plated goblets and a bust of the queen herself. Behind a marble bar, beverage director Franky Marshall (Monkey Bar) mixes quaffs such as a classic French 75 and an almond-milk-fortified Dauphin (chili liqueur, coconut). 135 Atlantic Ave, Brooklyn (347-227-8337, boudoirbk.com)
